

I should have looked ^{you} up in England then.
but for the fact that I undertook this job.

The passage of years & variety of experience leads people, whose ideals may have once been very similar, along quite different trails of thought and endeavour, and if this has proved to be the case, I request you not even to answer this letter. I shall understand, and should dislike to impose on you or anyone else the obligation of writing a conventional reply.

yours faithfully

Philip T. Dyker.
